

PRESS RELEASE

Bringing wood and glass together in interiors

21st September 2011, Monaco

Two Czech companies have combined traditional materials and know-how of working with them to create an entirely new concept in interior decoration. The results of cooperation between Sans Souci and Bohemian Works were presented for the first time in September at the Maison et Objet and Monaco Yacht Show.

The essence of the interconnection of products is the combination of two refined materials – glass and wood. The result is luxury interior decoration of varying character that makes space that bit more interesting, whether in the classic or the modern style. The basic factors in designing these products are the suitable choice of techniques for decorating glass and wood coupled with harmonisation as an impressive composition. The imaginative combination of materials can be applied to practically all types of furniture.

The latest innovations are wooden panels composed of wooden components of various shapes. These can be replaced by glass parts with simple or extravagant decor created mainly using sandblasting or laminating the glass. The advantage of wooden panels is their double use: as luxury floors on the horizontal and as partition walls that segment an area on the vertical. The visual effect is enhanced by the use of eye-catching light effects that can be programmed at various intensities, lengths and colours. In addition to walls and floors, this interesting combination offers tables in which the connection of the wooden base and the cut glass sheets dominate and chests of drawers with glass doors of various decor.

The companies are joined by more than just their Czech origins and their use of traditional materials: their respective portfolios concentrate on original design and high quality, elements which act as the basis of project design in line with the individual wishes of demanding clients.
